CAMDEN TO UNITY

From the MAINE STAY INN turn right on Rt. 1 south. At the flashing light by the Camden Library turn right on Rt. 52 north. (2 blocks)

Follow Rt. 52 north past Lake Megunticook into Lincolnville Center. At Lincolnville Center take Rt. 173 to Searsmont. (15) Local legend has it that Ben Ames Williams used Searsmont as the model for his novel Fraternity Village. Stay on Rt. 173 to Liberty. (22)

There's not much in Liberty, so you won't have any difficulty finding the Liberty Tool Company www.libertytoolco.com. We have no problem with telling you where the store is, we really don't even need to tell you that it is on the west side of the road – you'll see it. The problem is in adequately describing what they sell. They don't sell new tools, they don't sell antique tools, they don't sell junk - they sell old tools. They also sell old books and some other old stuff, but the focus is definitely tools.

When you have finished rummaging through the bins of old wooden planes and stuff, continue north on Rt. 173 for about a mile until you come to Rt. 220. Head north on Rt. 220 toward Freedom and Thorndike.

If your favorite old aunt is one of the 702 persons who call Thorndike home, don't take offence when we say that there are really only two reasons for going there. One is because you are on your way to Unity Pond to try your luck with the German Browns and Thorndike got in the way, or you wanted to visit the Bryant's Museum of Mechanical Music, Antique Cars and Stove Shop. Bryant's makes the trip worthwhile. In fact Bryant's makes a trip to Maine worthwhile.

This is a glimpse of one Maine family's vocation and avocation all at once. The collection of antique cars and mechanical musical devices and hundreds of beautiful old stoves, many of them in the process of repair and refurbishment, reminds us that there are still skilled craftsmen in this world who find the thrill of bringing a wonderful old object back to life to be more rewarding than making a lot of money.

Unity is just a few miles north of Thorndike on Rt. 220. A very sleepy village, Unity comes alive on the last weekend in September when the Common Ground Country Fair opens the gates to Maine's most loved agricultural fair.
